SEPTEMBER 27, 1953

We went down to Versailles this morning and had the Kosciuskos and the Elie de Rothschilds for lunch. Elie had been shooting yesterday somewhere and while he was looking for a bird in the bushes a neighboring farmer cut loose in his general direction with a discharge that lodged one pellet in his cheek. It was removed and has left a small black hole like a beauty spot.

I returned to town and met Jean Monnet, who had been seeing various French political figures over the week end. He is greatly encouraged over the prospects for ratification of EDC as well as EPC. I rode with him to the station where he took the train to Luxembourg.
